All,

Pay Period 3 wasn't quite as spectacular as PP2, but every pile on our list in Keystone is now gone. We also kept burning in Breckenridge; progress is slow, but the Red, White and Blue fire chief told me Friday that his residents are very happy to see smoke in the air and piles disappearing. We added 255 piles to the count for a total of 2,339 to date; our treated acres estimate now stands at 283.5.

We are still rolling up PP3 costs, but we'd spent $33,238 at the end of PP2 for a per-acre total of $140. This is $40/acre less than PP1, and I expect the number to drop further.

We received a smoke permit for the Mt Powell project area today, and we're hoping to finish those piles this week. We are looking to snowmachine into Tigiwon next week; we have about 100 large machine piles to take care of up there. We'll head back to Breckenridge once those are done.

The attached pic from Keystone Ranch is my new desktop background.....holler with questions! ---Ross
